An area of distinct similarities in one or several characteristics. Often created by governments to organize territory or established by using scientific data about a particular area (such as where people speak specific languages).

Formal Region

A region created by the interactions between a central point or “node” & surrounding locations. Often, when you travel further away from the “node”, you become less connected to the region. Businesses use these regions to distribute their products.

Functional Region

An area defined by subjective opinions that reflect the feelings & images about key place characteristics. These regions are not based on data, and often change over time. Sometimes called “vernacular” region

Perceptual Region
